Education is, perhaps, the most important change agent in a society. And accordingly; the institutions linked to education assume great importance for the cause of the welfare of the people. Unless the institutions deliver, progress on all fronts would be crippled. Given this context, institutional leadership and governance of academic institutions assume enormous significance. Research in this area has been plentiful and it suggests institutional failure as a major cause of societies going the wrong way and eventually degenerating.

Objectives of the programme:

The programme aims to help participants sharpen the decision-making skills required for effective leadership. The main objectives of this short course would be to help the participants to:

- Understand the nature of leadership in a dynamic environment
- Look into new perspectives on institutional leadership
- Gain the knowledge, understanding and skills to improve their own institutional performance.
- Develop appropriate methodologies to manage “change” in both national and international context.
Who Should Attend?
This short course will be of value for all people with responsibility and authority to shape institutions and the wide range of policies that go along with it.

- Heads of higher educational and other academic institutions, Heads of departments, senior academics, Registrars.
- Senior Marketing managers and other division managers involved in the formation and implementation of strategies.
- Directors of educational institutions – public and private.
- Senior administrators from public and private sector institutions.

Programme Contents:
- Issues in educational leadership
- Diversity management
- Higher education funding and the trust strategy approach-the UK experience
- Leadership management skills
- Conflict resolution
- Meditation and leadership.

Why Should You Attend?
There is no end to the learning process. Once a leader says – what is there new that much more limited because a very important parameter would get sidelined – the changing nature of the environment. Accordingly, at regular intervals, leaders/managers must engage themselves in “contemplation” – through programmes like these.
Cost of Event:
Registration cost: £600 for each person which covers training, materials, attendance certificate, lunch for two days, concluding dinner and networking event.
